From the Editor

Today, I was outside planting new flowers in my beds, my husband was trimming along the fence, my kids were playing with the neighbors, and other kids were riding their bikes up and down the street. Earlier today, a pretty impressive group of folks turned out to help clean up our neighborhood and greenbelt areas (look for more info and pictures in the next Memo). With all the cleaning, planting and playing, it made me appreciate my neighbors and my neighborhood.

But I have had some unpleasant experiences lately—a group of teens refused to move out of the street as I came home from my parents' house one night, with my kids in the car. One teen was on the verge of throwing rocks at my car. My neighbors have had roaming games of basketball in their driveways—one neighbor had drinks stolen from her porch, quite a few have had trash left in their yards, and I have had to say something to the teens about their language. The teens do not even move out of the driveway when the owner of the house comes home and tries to pull in. Slowly, basketball nets have come down along the street—but unfortunately, the games have just moved one house further down, then another.

But is that really the answer? To take away the basketball nets from our own kids to keep away those who cause problems? Many of the kids are not from the neighborhood—those that are, I hope their parents will take note and remind them of the way neighbors treat each other. What can we do about the others? Call the Springfield Township Police Non-emergency number (729-1300) every time you see this happening. Playing in someone else's driveway without permission is trespassing. It is illegal for anyone to walk in the street when a sidewalk is available. And theft and littering are both offenses as well.

Another thing to consider—this is prime real estate season as the school year winds down—if you aren't selling your house, I'm sure someone you know in the neighborhood is. How are we going to keep the Farms a great place to live if someone's first impression is of gangs of kids roaming the streets, using foul language and dropping their trash wherever they choose? What will that do to our neighborhood?

The behavior I'm seeing and others are seeing as well are the beginnings of gang behavior. The last thing I want is to not be able to spend a beautiful Saturday outside with my kids, planting my flowers while they play outside next door. Take action now. For you, for your kids, for your neighborhood. Let's keep the Farms ours.

Feeling, Getting, and Staying Better

Last month we looked at self-acceptance, while this month we will look at feeling getting and staying better through appropriate frustration tolerance. Why is it important to deal with frustration tolerance? Because, frustration tolerance is the ability of a person to continue on a task through set backs and difficulties, and life is full of setbacks and difficulties there are two types of frustration tolerances, high and low.

High frustration tolerance (HFT): beliefs are rational in the sense that they are again primarily flexible and not grossly exaggerated. These beliefs are expressed in their full form, thus: 'Failing my driving test would be difficult to tolerate, but I could stand it'. The stronger a person's unmet preference, the more difficult it would be for her to tolerate this situation, but if she holds an HFT belief it would still be tolerable. In this sense, an HFT belief is consistent with reality. It is also logical since it again makes sense in the context of the person's preference. Finally, like a preference and an anti-awful zing belief, it is constructive since it will help the person take effective action if the negative event that is being faced can be changed and it will encourage the person to make a healthy adjustment if the situation cannot be changed.

Low frustration tolerance (LFT): beliefs, on the other hand, are irrational in that they are first grossly exaggerated. They are couched in such statements as 'I cannot stand it. 'I cannot bear it. 'It is intolerable. When a person has a low frustration tolerance belief, she means one of two things: (i) she will disintegrate or (ii) she will never experience any happiness again. Since these two statements are obviously untrue, an LFT belief is inconsistent with reality. Finally, like musts and awfulizing beliefs, it is unconstructive since it will interfere with the person taking effective action if the negative event that the person is facing can be changed and it will stop the person from making a healthy adjustment if the situation cannot be changed.

So how will this keep me feeling, getting and staying better? When you are able to develop high frustration tolerance, you will be able to increase your power to change what you can change and except what you cannot change. Increasing ones ability to have power to change situations thus providing ultimate peace of mind.

To the Editor

A Fun Safe Place to be!!

I don't know about you and your families, but we are so excited that spring is here and summer is right around the corner!! Let me correct that, we were excited, but after this past weekend, we are very concerned. We moved into the Farms 9 years ago because of the close knit families, the clean neighborhood, all of the great activities that our neighborhood has to offer. We were all tweens and teenagers in the past, we all get excited about being outside playing, but we also have many young children in our neighborhood. What is bothering us and many other folks we have spoken with is that the amount of foul language being used by the kids out playing is horrible!!! We have young children as do many of our neighbors; we don't want our children to think that this is an OK behavior and we shouldn't have to keep our children in the house, they can still hear the nonsense when they are in the backyard.

The respect people have for other people's property, or shall I say lack of. We have seen kids just go into other people's yards and play or get into anything they see fit, they run into gardens, throw trash in yards, walk down the middle of the street and dare cars to hit them, they won't move. They have also been seen taunting drivers. Parents, on behalf of the Pleasant Run Community, we are asking you to please pay attention to what your children are doing, who they are with. Talk with them, remind them of the manners they were raised with. If your teen is a driver, please remind them that the speed limit in the Farms is 25 mph. !

The Springfield Twp. police have already been out making rounds this weekend. We heard them using the bull horn telling the teenagers to get out of the street!!!! This is only April!!!!!! We all want to have a great Spring and a Fantastic summer, but we all need to work together, parents, children and teens for this to happen. The Farms has always been a wonderful place to raise a family with strong family values. Please, let's keep it this way!!
